More than 150,000,000 people worldwide are affected by neurodegenerative diseases such as Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease and Huntington's disease. In addition, neurodegenerative disorders are a leading cause of death among the elderly, making the development of a treatment for these devastating diseases a crucial problem. The pathogenesis of neurodegenerative disorders is not well understood and neither is the mechanism of apoptosis following brain injuries. Recently, several studies have linked oxidative stress to the etiology of neurodegenerative diseases and discovered a link between apoptosis and neurodegeneration. Oxidative stress induces DNA damage and induces cell cycle arrest, which in turn activates apoptosis. The DNA damage signaling pathway is activated in neurodegenerative disorders and leads to the activation of the DNA repair enzyme poly ADP-ribose polymerase-1 (PARP-1). Activation of PARP-1 in neurons may act as a switch to a cell-death program as demonstrated in the presence of DNA-damaging agents. Together, these studies have implicated a potential role of PARP-1 in neurodegeneration and provided a new direction for therapeutics. This review highlights the role of DNA damage and its repair in pathogenesis of neurodegenerative disorders, and discusses the prospect for poly ADP-ribose polymerase-1-specific therapeutics in treatment of these devastating diseases.
